"SMALL POTATOES AND FEW IN A ROW" ISN'T A SONG FOR A WOMAN WITH HOE

Mrs. John F. Adams, of Seattle, Wash., won the potato growing championship of the city by producing 150 pounds of marketable spuds in five hills, an average of 30 pounds to a hill. Any rivals in Fairmont? Last spring Mrs. Adams saved the seed ends from "two-bits" worth of spuds and planted them in her rose garden. Every time the roses got a soaking the potatoes drank their fill and finally sprang into stalks five feet high. The croakers told her the potatoes were all going to vines. When harvest time came the ground along the five hills was a solid mass of potatoes.

Mrs. Adams picked the prize beauties by hand, the largest weighing two pounds and ten ounces.
